Jackie Mattox

Founder, President & CEO, WE United

Jackie Mattox is the Founder and CEO of WE United, a global nonprofit advancing leadership development across the electronics industry and broader technology sectors.

Since founding the organization in 2017, Jackie has grown WE United from a grassroots initiative into an international platform for leadership development, mentorship, and industry collaboration. Her work brings together executives and emerging leaders from manufacturers, distributors, contract manufacturers, and technology companies to strengthen leadership pipelines and expand professional opportunity.

With an education in communication, paired with a career in electronics sales and distribution management, Jackie connects industry experience with a practical understanding of people and organizational priorities. Her work focuses on aligning leadership development with business needs, helping leaders navigate change, and creating opportunities for collaboration across the electronics supply chain.

Passionate about systemic change, Jackie facilitates executive discussions and speaks internationally on leadership, organizational culture, workforce development, and the human implications of technological change. As host of the Voices of Innovation podcast, she interviews executives and subject matter experts on the evolving workforce, career navigation, and the future of technology.

She resides in Dana Point, California, and enjoys hiking, biking, time at the beach, and travel with family and friends.
